Leanne Nicolle:

Leadership in the Times of #MeToo: It's a Values Proposition

The seemingly endless stories out in the news over the last months on sexual misconduct has forced companies and individuals to take a long, hard look at their own values and culture. Time Magazine's person(s) of the year in 2017 were "the Silence Breakers", those brave and courageous people who spoke out about their experiences of harassment and abuse. The imbalance of power has shifted but is your company ready for the changes ahead?

Like 94% of CEO's in corporate Canada today, you may not think that harassment is an issue in your organization, however, as Leanne will share, it broke down one of Canada's public trusts, the Canadian Olympic Committee. There is no immunity from this problem!

Through her lived experience and work as a consultant on positive culture integration, Leanne Nicolle, former Executive Director of the Canadian Olympic Foundation, will share strategies on how to protect your organization's value system; empower a harassment free culture; and address modern concerns around culturally sensitive topics.

KEY LEARNING OBJECTIVES:

- How to leverage a strong value system within your organization to ensure employee trust and engagement.
- How to empower a harassment free culture.
- How to create openness around respectful, human interaction.
- How to communicate around culturally sensitive topics such as sexual misconduct.

Leanne Nicolle, idea generator, humanity advocate and globally minded social innovator left her private sector marketing executive career to dedicate her life to igniting courage in others and various social impact initiatives. Leanne has a passion for human development and has worked in the social space for UNICEF, Plan Canada and the Canadian Olympic Foundation. Currently, Leanne is the President and CEO of Big Brothers Big Sisters of Toronto where she is thriving in her role as leader and mentor.
